She Gave up the Veil

She was reared a Protestant, but was sent to Usufine Convent to complete her education, and embraced the Catholic faith, notwithstanding Judge Overton's strength or proposition, and appear of proposition and appear that he would Chased by a Hungry Bear.

There was an exciting scene in an alley near the inter-action of North avenue and Larrabse street, Chicago, about one o'clock yesterday morning. The principals were a big black bear, a woman and two police offi-evening, and broke out of his cage. Several persons knew that the bear had escaped from the cage, but supposed the barn was locked and the animal safe. So it was for six hours and more, but about twelve o'clock the animal managed to loosen one of the boards on the side of the building and climb down.

Then he began a silent tour of the streets in that vicinity. As near as can be learned, bruin went down Halstead street to North avenue and wandered about there without meeting any body until it came to Larrabee street. As the animal went around the corner, a woman came around the same co ner, going in an opposite way. What fol-lowed can be easily imagined. The female screamed and ran, the bear roared and gave chase It was a race for life, the woman afterward told the officers, and it is reason-able to suppose that it was, for the animal was hungry, and not any too tame at best. Fortunately Sergeant Frenzen and Officer Maloney beard the screams, and hastened to ber assistance. As the officers rounded the corner of an alley both fell head fore-most over the bear. The fight that ensued was bloody in the extreme, and it was not until both men had discharged the contents of their revolvers, fourteen shots in all, into the carcass of the bear that he was killed. The woman was found in a dead faint about
